Tom:

You may be interested in knowing that seven of the eight pieces of art that were reported missing in the Congressional Record have been found.

Attached provides the location. One piece has not been located as yet. While this does not excuse the loss, the item which cannot be found has drawn little or no concern from the NFCA.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Extensions of Remarks

June 29, 1978

honoring Centella Maiese for her dedication to her community. As wife of Winslow Township's Mayor Dominic Maiese, Centella has maintained an active profile through both the church and club, to the benefit of many others. Certainly, an outstanding woman such as this deserves recognition. As such, I would like to join her family and friends on June 30 in honoring her. May Centella continue to succeed in all her endeavors. ●

THE ART OF GOVERNMENT

HON. TOM HAGEDORN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 28, 1978

● Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, while it is the multi-billion-dollar expenditures that do them the most damage, it is frequently the petty indignities heaped upon taxpayers by many public officials that most infuriate them. A recent example is the case of the 257 "unlocated" works of art that have been loaned out by the National Collection of Fine Arts to various executive offices.

According to a report by Dom Bonafede in the National Journal, at least 257 original works of art, purchased with tax dollars for the enjoyment of the public, and loaned primarily to Presidential aides, are likely never to be recovered. While no total value has been placed on these works, it is worth noting that only the highest quality art work is ever accepted or purchased by the collection in the first place.

This bipartisan thievery, and there is no other name for it in my opinion, typifies the lack of respect, manifested in so many other ways, that too many public officials have for taxpayer dollars. I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the complete list of these missing paintings. While I doubt it, I would hope that some of their current "possessors" would be shamed into returning their stolen property.

The list follows:

THE TREASURE HUNT FOR 257 WORKS OF ART

JUSTICE IN EVERYDAY LIFE

HON. JOHN BRADEMAs

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 28, 1978

• Mr. BRADEMAs. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege on May 1, 1978 of having heard the Law Day address for the St. Joseph County Bar Association in South Bend, Ind., in the district I am honored to represent in Congress.

The address on this occasion was delivered by Thomas L. Shaffer, professor of law at the University of Notre Dame and former dean of the Notre Dame Law School.

Professor Shaffer addressed himself on this occasion to the meaning of justice.

I think that his remarks on this occasion will be read by every Member of the House of Representatives and Senate with great interest and, indeed, benefit.

I insert at this point in the RECORD the text of Professor Shaffer's remarks.

JUSTICE IN EVERYDAY LIFE

One problem with the idea of justice is that it is too important. It is, like the ideas of patriotism and love of neighbor, functionally inaccessible, because we respect it too much.

A scholar is not free to criticize the idea of justice, but he may be free to break it down and look at it in some of its simpler forms. The idea might in that way become more accessible.

Breaking the idea of justice down into a simpler form is somewhat like what Sigmund Freud did to the idea of psychological health in his book "The Psychopathology of Everyday Life."

Freud was the founder of modern medical psychology. He spent his life laboring to cure those who were disabled by manias and hysteria. Some of them were paralyzed. Some couldn't talk or sleep or eat. Freud used hypnosis to find the causes of these disabilities. He invented psychoanalysis as a way to lead his patients to the discovery of the causes.

His career was among abnormal people. He noticed this, and noticed that his work led him to ignore the oddities, curious events, and foulups which make ordinary life uncomfortable and interesting.

"The Psychopathology of Everyday Life" was about the ordinary and the normal in the way our minds work. It's a nice book, as books on psychology go, because it uncovers reasons for ripples in the routine:

Freud left his umbrella at a friend's house, and tried to figure out why, and realized that he left it because he liked being at his friend's house; he hated to leave, and he left a bit of himself—his umbrella—behind.

I am summoned to a meeting I don't want to attend. I say "I'll be glad to come." But when I go, I forgot to bring papers I need for the meeting. Did I really "forget" them? Didn't I really leave them because I'm telling myself something about boring meetings? I am fighting, but haven't admitted it.

Freud told about a patient of his whose wife had given him a book. Patient and wife weren't getting along. The patient lost the new book before he had a chance to read it. He looked everywhere; he could not find the book.

Six months later, when the patient and his wife were getting along better, the patient found the book, in an obvious place in his desk.

That's the "Psychopathology of Everyday Life." Freud's conclusion was that ordinary accidents and incidents of absentmindedness are not accidents at all.

There is also justice in everyday life, which is to cases in courts what Freud's lost umbrella was to psychoanalysis.

ORDINARY JUSTICE OF EVERY DAY LIFE

Ordinary justice is what we people give one to another because we hope to be able to live together. This justice is a quiet, everyday thing. Our access to justice is quiet and ordinary, too—as quiet and ordinary as the psychopathology of everyday life.

Contracts are an example. Law students study complex cases of disputed contracts. Hollywood even makes movies about law students studying contract disputes. The courts in one Indiana county may decide a hundred lawsuits this month and which involve contracts. But today, in the same county, tens of thousands of contracts will be performed without dispute—everything from two neighbors who agree to share the cost of repairing common driveway to a term loan agreement to finance a new factory at the edge of town.

For every lawsuit over a will which is tried in our courts, hundreds of wills are opened, read, and quietly carried out.

For every criminal case which goes to trial, hundreds of violations and the law are resolved or avoided by police officers, public officials, and such ingenious institutions as the night prosecutor's office in St. Joseph County.

All of this happens because most of us are willing to give justice to one another. We are willing, even, to give more than justice; we are willing to pay a little extra as an investment in order and mutual confidence and a peaceful community.

And so, if we are wise enough, we don't demand all our rights. The mortgage company takes a late payment. The man next door throws my son's ball back over the fence. The police officer takes more abuse than he should have to take from a drunk or a cocky teenager.

That is the justice of everyday life, and everyday life is our main access to justice. Everyday justice is not an accident, anymore than the psychopathology of everyday life is an accident.

JUSTICE IS A VIRTUE

The justice of everyday life depends on good will, but the good will on which everyday justice depends is not good will at large. It is not a matter of my extending kindness when I feel like being kind. The good will on which justice depends is more disciplined than that. This good will has been built on habit—the habit of justice under law. That's what we mean when we say justice is a virtue. That it is a habit. Virtues are good habits.

One reason tens of thousands of contracts are being performed today, without dispute, is that we expect one another to keep promises. And every year hundreds of lawyers and other citizens work those rules over, not to create lawsuits, but to prevent lawsuits.

Lawyers and legislators in Indiana have been revising the rules on probate of wills, almost continuously, since 1953—not so there will be more wills in court, but so that there will be fewer wills in court.

For most people, justice is not a matter of going to court. It is a matter of habit. It is a matter, first, of a personal good habit. Justice is also a social good habit; the social good habit is what we call government under law.

Justice is not a gift of the government. It is a gift at all, it is a gift we give one another. Before justice is anything else, it is our willingness to work things out together. And then it is our willingness to work out rules for one another to follow. This willingness to work out the rules is what we mean by "justice under law." Our access to justice is an assurance that most of us, most of the time, will keep our promises, will follow what our relatives say in their wills, and will give decent respect to police officers.

JUSTICE AND THE LAW

Law comes into this at the point at which we begin to expect things from one another. Law is the conversation we have when we try to work out those expectations. If my neighbor and I cannot agree on who should fix the driveway, we are going to have to turn somewhere for a settlement of our disagreement. What we turn to is the experience of the community on fixing driveways. This includes our own experience, and our own attempt to make sense of our experience.

This is not a turning away from the virtue of justice, but it is turning away from reliance solely on good will. Good will is not necessarily a habit; it is not as dependable as a habit. But justice is a habit; it is more dependable than good will. The virtue of justice is involved when my neighbor and I disagree on repairing the driveway because the experience of the community on fixing driveways backs up to an idea about what a just person, a virtuous person, should do in the circumstances. In this way, law backs up to a challenge to our better selves. When it is any good at all, law is a challenge to our better selves.

When my neighbor and I turn to the experience of the community, we are likely to end up consulting what a virtuous person should do, whether we realize it or not. That's what happens when people turn to the law. Law is what we have decided together to expect of one another. As my colleague and friend, Professor Stanley Hauerwas says, law is the space God gives us to work things out for ourselves.

Of course, force is involved. Part of the idea of law is that force will be used, if necessary, to enforce the rules we have decided to have. Justice under law is a noble idea, but it is also a sad truth. We have found out that we cannot get along with good will alone. We have to work out rules. And we have to enforce the rules.

But government under law means that the rules come before the force. The rules we have worked out together come first; then the force, if force is necessary—and it is usually not necessary. For every broken law there are a million instances of law obeyed. The justice in everyday life, dispenses, for the most part, with any need for force.

It is as important as anything can be not to confuse justice with force. Force comes from the government, but justice does not come from the government. Justice is the gift we give one another as we go about living under the law, and as we go about making the law fit our lives. Our truthfulness in doing this is where justice comes from.

Justice is not the result of power. It is not the result of force. The idea that governments provide goodness—that power provides justice—is where tyranny begins.

DISCUSSION OF CLASSIFIED OR CONTROLLED INFORMATION
IN PUBLIC AREAS OF AGENCY FACILITIES

☐ STATINTL

1. Employees are prohibited by regulation ☐ from discussing classified or controlled information in hallways, elevators, restrooms, and cafeterias. This restriction must be observed because of the number of non-Agency visitors and ☐ service personnel permitted access to Agency facilities who hold less than full staff clearance and have no "need-to-know."

2. A common and mistaken assumption exists regarding classified conversations in the Headquarters ☐ cafeteria. Classified conversations in this facility, as well as in the ☐ cafeteria, are prohibited. Bulger, Lash, North & Rodriguez, Jr.

DISCUSSION OF CLASSIFIED OR CONTROLLED INFORMATION
IN PUBLIC AREAS OF AGENCY FACILITIES

STATINTL

1. cautions employees not to discuss classified or controlled information in hallways, elevators, restrooms or cafeterias. These restraints are based on need-to-know principles in view of the access of a number of non-Agency visitor personnel and/or service personnel holding less than full staff clearance to some of these facility areas.

2. The configuration of the Headquarters staff and visitor cafeterias, sharing a common wall, may cause some confusion with respect to classified conversations. A common assumption is that classified conversations are authorized in the staff cafeteria and prohibited in the visitors' cafeteria.

3. All personnel are reminded that classified material should not be discussed in either cafeteria.

STATINTL

As far as Regs Control is concerned it is cancelled for now. (The proposed Notice.) But Cathy said that at a later date they may go ahead with it and have the notice put out. (She had a call in to about something else. She said that she would mention this to him.)

Per Cathy in Regs Control Branch - OS has not resubmitted the proposed notice. They were told before to hold off on this. At this point, nothing has been done.

2. REASONS FOR RECOMMENDATION (If more space is needed, use plain paper)

STATINTL

Referent comments by [] are correct. [] Paragraph 8b(2) is explicit with regard to the discussion of classified information. In addition, Paragraph 8b(3) of the same manual ~~contains~~ cautions against the discussion of classified information in the presence of other non-Agency "service type" personnel. This includes the GSI personnel who work in the staff cafeteria and are not cleared.

It is apparent that the suggester is assuming that classified conversations are authorized in the staff cafeteria and are not authorized in the visitors' cafeteria. If this precaution is unclear to the suggester, it is likely that many other Agency employees are operating under the same assumption. In this respect, the appropriate regulation circulated to all Agency employees in the form of a Headquarters Notice would probably be more productive than posting warning signs in all cafeterias.

This office will pursue the matter regarding the issuance of the appropriate Headquarters Notice.

TITLE OR SUBJECT OF SUGGESTION

Security Problem in the Hqs. Visitor's Cafeteria

SUGGESTION NO.

77-229

PRESENT METHOD

Uncleared personnel are permitted in the Hqs. Visitors Cafeteria. The Visitors cafeteria shares a common wall with the Staff cafeteria. Classified conversations taking place in the Staff cafeteria may be quite plainly heard in the Visitors cafeteria unbeknownst to the speakers if the listeners table is situated near the common wall.

SUGGEST

The common wall be appropriately sound proofed, if this is not possible, warning notice be placed on the Staff cafeteria tables near the common wall.

ADVANTAGES

The situation is such that now it is difficult not to even inadvertently hear conversations unbeknownst to the speaker through the common wall. Eliminating this problem will obviously enhance overall Hqs. Security.
